

3. That a large wooden cupboard, theatre nurse (who is supposed to be painted and enamelled white, be relatively sterile) making excursions placed in the anaesthetic room. along the corridors while operations wall space is available between the are in progress.
radiation and the slab at the end I trust that my suggestions of the sinks. will have your favourable consideration

My reason for making the first two suggestions is that the instruments are deteriorating very rapidly because the atmosphere in the anaesthetic room is constantly laden with steam from the sterilisers. With regard to the third suggestion - the existence of such a cupboard would obviate the necessity for the

Yours faithfully,

Christina M. Newark.